What We Are Seeing

What are we seeing, you ask? We are seeing colos – lots of colos! In this version of WWAS, we are going to explain why colocations are a key value driver in the tower business, and we are going to review colo activity over the last quarter for a number of our portfolio companies.

² The definition of the term "development" is not consistent across the portfolio companies. Regardless of how a portfolio company uses this term, it is worth noting that not all projects in "development" will mature into completed towers.

First, what is a colo? A colo – short for co-location – is the addition of a new tenant to an existing tower. So, for example, if we build a tower for Verizon (i.e., Verizon is our anchor tenant) and AT&T wants to add its equipment to that tower, we would refer to AT&T as a new co-location tenant – or more typically as a “colo.” On average, a colocation lease is $2,000 - $2,500 per month, but the range of potential rent is wide, perhaps $1,500 - $4,500 per month depending upon a number of factors including the amount of equipment being added and the demand for that particular tower which is, to a large part, driven by the local zoning environment and population density.

Keep in mind that adding a colo is a desktop exercise for our companies; it involves paperwork only. Our companies do not purchase, install, insure or operate the new equipment, nor do they make any representations as to whether the new equipment will achieve the coverage or capacity goals that the wireless carriers’ desire. How many colos can you add to a tower? Generally, a tower is designed to hold four tenants – an anchor tenant plus three colo tenants.

People are often unimpressed by the dollar figures above; they seem small. But, let’s do the math. If we add $2,500 per month of revenue to a single tower, that is $30,000 per year. In most cases, 100% of that $30,000 in revenue drops to the bottom line (i.e., there is no marginal expense). If we are selling tower cash flow (“TCF”) at a multiple of 30x (or greater), that colo is worth at least $900,000 – two to three times what it cost us to build the tower in the first place. And that $900,000 in value is for that colo alone; it is incremental to the value from pre-existing anchor and colo tenants.

So, you ask, how often does this happen? Fortunately, quite often. Lease-up³ is reflected in our Excel models as a ratable phenomenon for simplicity’s sake (e.g., 15% of the towers in a portfolio will be projected to add a tenant each year), but it doesn’t occur ratably in the real world. It comes in waves. In other words, we typically cannot predict whether a particular wireless carrier will add equipment to a particular tower in the next quarter, but we are pretty good at projecting average lease-up for a portfolio of towers over the relevant time frame (which may be years).

We are currently seeing a large colo wave from T-Mobile alongside heightened activity from AT&T and Verizon. While we keep company-specific data confidential, the following are some statistics that will put that statement in perspective.

Company A benefitted from more than four times as much lease-up (in dollar terms) in the first quarter of 2025 compared to the first quarter of 2024.

Company B benefitted from colos on more than 10% of its sites in the first quarter of 2025. To put that in context, if a company were to achieve such a milestone over four quarters, that would be a respectable year; Company B achieved it in one quarter.

Company C’s first quarter 2025 lease-up exceeded its entire 2024 full year lease-up.

Company D’s lease-up budget for all of 2025 was $1.0 million and, including applications in process, it exceeded that solely in the first quarter of 2025 with $1.16 million.

Similarly, Company E executed leases totaling more than $1.10 million in annualized lease-up in the first quarter of 2025.

To put a total dollar value on this lease-up, just the five companies referenced above added nearly $3.25 million of TCF in the first quarter of 2025 alone. Applying the aforementioned TCF multiple of 30x, that is an increase in value of approximately $100 million across just five of our portfolio companies – in a span of only three months. To be clear, this wave is not unique to these five companies. A common refrain on recent tracker calls with our management teams is that lease-up activity hasn’t been this robust in years – many recalling a wave of Dish colos in 2021. While we are highlighting only a handful of companies in the statistics above, this current wave is being enjoyed across the industry.

Financial and Administrative Matters

Enclosed with this report are the Fund’s unaudited financial statements for the period ended March 31, 2025. Your individual statement of partner’s capital has been uploaded to the Peppertree portal.

³ In addition to colos, “lease-up” also includes amendments to existing leases. For example, if Verizon is the anchor tenant on a tower and it wants to add antennas to an existing array or add a microwave dish, that would be an amendment – sometimes referred to as a “mod” (short for modification). Similarly, if T-Mobile is an existing colocation tenant on a tower and it wants to add a back-up generator, that, too, would be amendment or mod. Each of these changes requires an amendment to the lease – and that amendment is often accompanied by an increase in the recurring monthly rent we charge.

Through the date of this report, the Fund (excluding Peppertree Capital FX Co-Investors, LLC) has drawn $790,911,292 of the $2,030,541,990 of its committed capital – 39.0%.

Thank you for your continuing confidence in our efforts. If you have any questions or concerns, please feel free to contact any of us.

Very truly yours,
